American nurse Ebola isolation policy criticism compulsory measures cited concer

Recently, the United States of New York and New Jersey began to return, from West African countries and may have had contact with the Ebola patients personnel to take compulsory isolation measures. However, once in Sierra Leone against Ebola epidemic nurse Kaci Hickox strongly condemned her in return for rough treatment suffered by the United States at the same time, the White House said after the implementation of this policy concerns. Kaci Hickox26 in a telephone interview, said: "I think my basic human rights were violated, whether physical or mental accept facing great pressure." She hopes to get free demands are boyfriend and law support, her boyfriend said: "if the concerned about civil liberties and you also like me, please support the free Hickox. The development of regulations and policies the government can not based on fear, but according to the medical facts." While lawyers also said, "her conduct was moved, she ought to be released. We will appeal to the state of New Jersey and the government as soon as possible to release her. We think, speak the state government from medical up is no reason to isolate her."
